A recent review of OSHA citations in Wisconsin shows a marked increase in the number of violations being written against roofing contractors. While residential roofers make up a significant portion of those receiving citations, commercial roofing contractors are being cited as well.

The stakes are high, with violations more likely to cost thousands of dollars. More than that, the impact of an injury on productivity, Worker's Compensation, and other insurances can be devastating. And all of this is to say nothing about the cost to the injured worker.

This meeting is about creating a dialogue between the WRCA and its contractor members and OSHA. It's an important first step toward building a relationship based on a shared goal of workplace safety, but one with a solid foundation in the realities of today's construction work sites. It's about gaining understanding and making better, more informed decisions based on that understanding.

This invitation is for all principals of WRCA members and those responsible for workplace safety. To improve the dialogue, we are limiting participation in the meeting so we are asking each company to limit its representation to no more than two people.

There is no cost to attend. Don't miss this opportunity to hear, first-hand, from the OSHA leadership in our area.
